Objectives & Content:

(1) European Cultures and Identities

This course offers students an introduction to Europe, a continent of great diversity. The themes covered in the course will help students understand the complicated structure of Europe. It will shed some light on the motives for integration as well as the obstacles on the way to European unity. Students will come across topics such as the emergence and construction of national identities, national identity versus European identity, the cultural heritage of Europe, and the processes of globalization and transnational collaboration. Lectures will focus on the history, social and economic structures, culture, and current political and social debates within the wider European community. Excursion to related establishments is included in the programme.

(2) European Politics and Economy

This course offers students an introduction to the political landscape of Europe. The European Union (EU) is a political partnership between 28 democratic European countries. With almost 500 million citizens, it has become a major player in global politics. In this course, European Union is the main object of study. Students will be introduced to the EU's history, institutional structures, current aims, and future challenges, they will also learn the historical background and the various stages of integration. Other themes that students will examine include the role of European leaders, the future political expansion of the EU, transatlantic relations and the development of a shared foreign policy and development aid. Excursion to related establishments is included in the programme.

*This course requires basic knowledge about European politics and history.
