The 46th Congregation

The 46th congregation for the conferment of honorary degrees and the celebration of the 30th anniversary of the University was held at the Sir Run Run Shaw Hall on 14th October. HE the Governor and Chancellor of the University, the Rt. Hon. Christopher Patten, officiated at the ceremony, which was attended by over 850 guests including some 80 official representatives from educational institutions in Hong Kong and overseas.

The Chancellor conferred the degree of Doctor of Literature, honoris causa, on Dr. Yo-yo Ma and Mr. Zao Wou-ki, the degree of Doctor of Social Science, honoris causa, on Dr. Cheng Yu-tung and Dr. Lee Shau-kee, and the degree of Doctor of Laws, honoris causa, on Mr. Thomas H. C. Cheung. The Rev. Shih Cheng-yen was indisposed and thus unable to come to Hong Kong to receive the honorary degree of Doctor of Social Science in person. Their citations were written and delivered by Mr. T. L. Tsim, director of The Chinese University Press.

In an address made on behalf of the honorary graduates, Dr. Thomas H. C. Cheung described the educational ideals and the accomplishments of the University over the last 30 years, stressing that 'Rooted in Hong Kong and with a splendid heritage from the Chinese as well as Western cultural traditions, the University regards it as its duty to serve both Hong Kong and China.' Himself an alumnus of the University, he called upon all CUHK alumni to 'repay their alma mater and the community by contributing their experience and resources, and to work together with the University to meet the challenges of the 21st century.' The full text of Dr. Cheung's speech and the citations will be published in the Chinese University Bulletin (Autumn•Winter 1993 issue).

A tea reception was held after the ceremony outside the Science Centre.

Nobel Laureate Lectures on the Speed and Scope of Economic Transition

Over 1,000 students, staff members and guests gathered in the Sir Run Run Shaw Hall on 4th October to hear a talk on 'Economic Transition: Speed and Scope' delivered by Prof. Kenneth J. Arrow, Nobel Laureate in Economic Science. The lecture was presented by the Faculty of Social Science to commemorate the University's 30th anniversary.

Prof. Arrow, Joan Kenney Emeritus Professor of Economics and Emeritus Professor of Operations Research at Stanford University, USA, is a giant in the field of modern economics. His exposition of the general equilibrium systems, his analysis of collective and social choice based on individual preferences, and his theories on production functions, optimal public investments and inventory policies have all won him international acclaim. He was awarded the Nobel Prize in Economic Science in 1972 and his influence is far-reaching.

In his lecture, Prof. Arrow analysed the transition of the economies of Eastern Europe and the former Soviet Union along two major themes, the role of time and the role of state direction. He pointed out that even given the ultimate goal of a free market economy, there were a range of alternative immediate steps in the transition and many possibilities for the structure of the free market economy when it emerges. The speed and modalities of change in different places might be very different. He discussed the alternatives in the light of general economic theory and new developments in the theory of organization, and stressed that movement to a free economy must take time for very elementary reasons of economics.

Father of Fuzzy Logic on Campus

Prof Lotfi A. Zadeh, creator of the theory of fuzzy logic in 1965, gave a public lecture entitled 'Fuzzy Logic and Soft Computing: Principles, Applications and Perspectives' on 26th October at the Sir Run Run Shaw Hall. The function was organized by the Faculty of Engineering.

Now Professor Emeritus of Electrical Engineering and Computer Sciences and director of the Berkeley Initiative on Soft Computing at the University of California at Berkeley, Prof. Zadeh is still active in research on fuzzy logic and neural network theory.

Fuzzy logic describes human activities, which are by nature imprecise, in a mathematical and structured way. It recognizes the fact that there are many situations where an exact, quantitative or measurable description is unnecessary, and where imperfect (or 'fuzzy') information is sufficient to guide human decisions. Present-day applications of fuzzy logic ranges from the guidance of spacecraft and robotics to the control of domestic appliances such as rice-cookers and washing machines.

In his lecture, Prof. Zadeh described soft computing as a collection of computing methodologies which were effective in dealing with problems having approximate solutions. Its principal aim is to exploit the tolerance for imprecision and uncertainty to achieve tractability, robustness and low solution cost. The major constituents of soft computing are fuzzy logic, neural networks, and probabilistic reasoning. Computers armed with these elements may imitate the decision-making processes of human minds, which have the ability to summarize data and focus on decision-relevant information.

Prof. Zadeh also examined recent advances in fuzzy logic and soft computing and discussed their potential applications.

Hanzix: Chinese Open System Computing

A group of researchers from the Department of Computer Science attended a seminar held in Beijing from 18th to 21st October on information technology in mainland China and Taiwan.

The function was jointly organized by the Chinese Information Technology Committee on the mainland and the Institute for Information Industry in Taiwan. The purpose was to discuss strategies for and technical issues involved in establishing common standards in Chinese computing. The CUHK contingent was invited because of its research on Chinese open system computing, or the 'Hanzix' project.

The objective of the Hanzix project is to devise a standard platform for Chinese computing in an open system environment, so that Chinese software can be developed for use without modification in China, Taiwan, Hong Kong, and other Chinese communities overseas.

In the seminar CUHK representatives introduced to other participants the progress of their research and gained support from the right groups for the Hanzix project. They will continue to liaise with relevant government departments and private industries in mainland China and Taiwan and contribute their share towards establishing common standards for Chinese information technology.

Entrepreneurship Luncheon Talk

Two MBA alumni associations of the University launched their Entrepreneurship Luncheon Talk Series on 6th October 1993 at the Regent Hotel.

The first guest speaker invited was local business magnate Dr. Cheng Yutung. Prof. Lee Kam-hon, dean of business administration, introduced Dr. Cheng as a world class entrepreneur with global visions in his business strategies.

Dr. Cheng let the audience in on the key of his success, which can be summarized in 22 words: establish your credibility; keep your promises; be diligent; be cautious; honour those who have helped you; and never trade righteousness for profit. He also elaborated on business opportunities in China and called upon MBA students and alumni of the University to apply their professional knowledge not only to business management but also social service.

Workshop on Pelviscopic Surgery

The first ever workshop on pelviscopic surgery in Hong Kong was organized on 8th and 9th October by the University's Department of Obstetrics and Gynaecology, with assistance from the Department of Surgery, the Animal House and the Prince of Wales Hospital.

Over 30 local gynaecologists from the Hospital Authority and the private sector attended the function. Dr. C. S. Ou from the Department of Obstetrics and Gynaecology at the University of Washington, Seattle, performed three live surgical demonstrations on laparoscopic hysterectomy, colposuspension and ovarian cystectomy. Participants were also given the opportunity to obtain 'hands on' experience in operating with video laparoscopy under the supervision of experienced surgeons in a practical session conducted in the Animal House.

The workshop was sponsored by Olympus Instruments and Johnson and Johnson.

42nd Anniversary of Chung Chi College

Chung Chi College held its 42nd Founders' Day Thanksgiving Service on 29th October in its college chapel. The Rev. Dr. Daniel Chow Tin Wo, district minister of Tsung Tsin Mission, Hong Kong, addressed the assembly. Mr. George Hung, chairman of the college board of trustees, and Dr. Philip Shen, head of college, presented awards and scholarships to prize winners. The Chung Chi College Alumni Association presented gifts to their alma mater, which included a song composed by Dr. Chan Wing-wah with lyrics written by Dr. Sonia Ng. A rendition of the song was given by Miss Lee Bing, a well-known singer, on the same occasion.

The college student union also organized a host of celebration activities: a carnival, a round-the-campus race, debates and departmental singing contests. The traditional 'Thousand-People Feast' was held at the Lingnan Stadium in the evening.

The Pearl Reunion

A 30th Anniversary Celebration

Every fifth year this university enjoys a glow of pride as it celebrates another milestone in its history. This year it shares this pride with the more than 800 alumni attending the 30th anniversary dinner on 16th October. Comprising faculty members, trustees, council members, honorary graduates, benefactors and friends from all walks, the total attendance at the dinner, a high point in this year of celebration, was over one thousand.

This 30th birthday party celebrates many firsts: the first gathering together of such illuminati in 30 years, the inauguration of the University Convocation, the first donation to open an Alumni Fund....

So here we are on the very night of the event. The Subcommittee on Anniversary Dinner has gone into top gear as all of its many hours of planning and worrying come to the test.

The first of the many planning meetings took place early in the year when we all cheerfully felt we had much time. The location for the event had been booked already and our very competent secretary, C. M. Tai, had compiled a detailed work schedule. The use of the Convention Hall facilities together with catering and floral arrangements on each table was based on a fixed charge per head. As the event had to be self-financing, the need to break even weighed heavily and additional expenses had to be given careful consideration.

We gave thought to the more recent alumni, now only on the lower rungs of their career ladders, and set ticket prices at a marketable rate. But what should be done to make up the shortfall if ticket income could not fully cover total expenses? How could we avoid further calls on the generosity of donors who had already contributed substantially towards the costs of the many other events celebrating the 30th anniversary?

In the end we succumbed to the old, old formula of asking friendly businesses and individuals to donate raffle prizes and enchanting young ladies to urge the wealthier amongst us to buy the raffle tickets in bulk — effectively a customer-administered multi-tiered pricing of tickets, with the added lure of prizes. The two gracious citizens on either side of me at my table, Drs Lee Shau-kee and Cheng Yu-tung, fulfilled this need most generously, as did many others. But it has become a very over-used solution and anyone who can create an innovative way of achieving the same ends deserves an accolade.

Our designer, a recommendation from Hardy Tsoi, delighted us with his interestingly different backdrops for the stage and the simple purple drapery with pearls and shells on each table. It was low cost and effective. However the choice of the table flowers by the Convention Centre turned out, at the last minute, to be pink carnations or an additional charge for blooms of a different hue. Neither option was deemed satisfactory. Running out of time to investigate less expensive alternatives, I made the decision to produce our own table centrepieces using silk flowers. My house staff, who had happily made the napkin rings over the summer for us, now were equally helpful. The flowers were bought, taken apart, cut and arranged into 90 centrepieces (each crowned with a folded paper-crane) over the four days before D-day to become one of the table prizes. I was pleased to see laughing people carrying floral table prizes out on their way home. Coincidentally I picked the lucky number seven on my table and became one with the laughing crowd.

For those who still find the music too loud or too soft, it was not possible to compromise more. In a hall as large as this, with the equipment available, the band was just great. Quieter spots could easily be found at the periphery for those wishing to converse. And for those enamoured with the big beat, the ringside tables were ideal. The choice of where to sit in the latter part of the night became a free one as people moved around and any grumbler would be lacking in initiative!

Comes the raffle time — a long drumroll to announce ubiquitously the draw of the grand prizes! Alas, not long or loud enough for the holder of the first lucky number called. In answering a call of nature instead of responding to the call on stage she loses her winning to another's gain, much to her dismay. Another lucky winner is unhappy with the joking suggestion the M. C. makes of her 'student status'! Whilst

I, in the full glare of the spotlight, goodnatureedly accept my failure to enunciate correctly in Cantonese the names of the M. C.s. We three contribute much to the lighter side of the evening!

One committee member, Shirley Kwok, says to me, 'I can't believe it. Everything is going so smoothly. Do you think we are rushing through the programme too fast?'

Indeed all too soon the evening entertainment is over. The photographs have been taken, the food — well presented and quite tasty — has been eaten. Some agree with Shirley. The programmed part was too short. Yet others are happy that the formal speeches and ceremonies were not overlong, being quickly and efficiently conducted.

The Vice-Chancellor and I stay to enjoy a short boogie session on the now uncrowded dance floor. Before I leave, the committee assures me all is winding down in good order. In the final analysis, one can only expect to please some of the people some of the time. Most of us had a fun-filled evening. All went smoothly with only the usual small, to-be-expected, hitches.

I count myself lucky to have had such a talented committee to chair. They did all the hard work and made my task an easy one. The committee knows it takes much coordinated teamwork and effort for the staging of such an event. I hope all who attended worked equally hard at happily enjoying themselves!
