

I really want to say thank you to my college for providing the platform that relates university students to successful people in the industry.

It was a pleasant and fruitful learning journey for me, attending interactive workshops and participating in team games. The speeches by guests pushed me to ponder a lot about questions that are important to our life but normally neglected by us. Through pursuing answers, my self-awareness has risen and I obtained a clearer picture about my future.

Students' Reflection

One activity I remember the most is when I was asked to step on a speaker's back. It took me great courage and I realized those who achieve high usually place themselves low first and serve others, help them succeed first.

All in all, I would recommend this workshop series to any university students who wish to gain better understanding about themselves, their life and dream.

(Cheng Ningning / IBBA / 2017 graduate)

When I signed up for the Way to Success Course, I didn't expect to meet passionate mentors who are willing to share with us their experiences that encourage all the mentees and I to be better leaders and better people. The series of lessons started with self-empowerment, but the lesson was not filled with cliches. After telling us to envision our ideal life, Mr Peter Ho shared with us his life experience to prove that our life events and the people we meet along the way are all interconnected. He also showed that we should and must believe in ourselves. The second session was about active communication, and Journalist Nury Vittachi taught us how we can effectively communicate with others. From that lesson I learnt that emotions are contagious, and a smile can help us go a long way and make other people's lives easier. Heartfelt stories about integrity, trust, and life choices were shared in the last two sessions.

Other than listening to lectures, the course is also meant to be a mentorship program. I am glad that I have met friendly mentors and Sunnies. All of them lead fruitful lives and I learnt a lot from all of them.

(Lee Shirley Ho-Ying / ENGE / 2017 graduate)

Students' Reflection

The Way To Success is definitely a worthwhile and intellectually-rewarding course in which I gained insights into life management, relationship building and doing a servant leader. All these components are the keys to paving my way to success.

First and foremost, regarding life management, I learnt how to list, allocate and prioritize my work. Everyone is equal in terms of having 24 hours in every day. The way of how we fully utilize our limited time is of paramount importance to have a meaningful life. I will set a timetable, listing the importance and urgency of different things and allocating my work on different time slots to improve my efficiency with my strict adherence. And taking a rest to rejuvenate myself and keeping my emotion stable also play a pivotal role in enhancing my productivity. Act now and plan for tomorrow.

(Ma Cheuk Long Thomas /
Social Science / Year 2)

In addition, concerning relationship building, mutual trust and integrity are the keys. I understand trust is crucial to team work, be it projects at school or collaboration with colleagues. With mutual understanding comes unity and harmony, trust also rests on integrity, that is the consistency of thoughts, words and actions. Integrity is highly valued in the workplace as it helps me leave colleagues and the superior with a good impression on me. Do unto others as you would have them do unto you.

The last thing is doing a servant leader. A servant leader should be sensitive to others, take care of other's needs and help others succeed. He should also walk the talk, be willing to make sacrifice and inspire hope but not being selfish and only consider his own interests. More empathy, less apathy.

Upon the completion of The way to success course, I was benefited with the interactive mode of learning and had a profound understanding on the role of a leader in a society. Unlike typical classes that focus on hard knowledge and theory, the course incorporates situations that we will encounter in life, students are required to share their views with peers or participate in activities. The bilateral interaction makes learning more practical, at the same time enhancing students' self-understanding by opinions from the course mates. The course also provides me valuable chance to interact with leaders and professional from different industries. The mentors shared with student essential life skills in different senses, from how to cope with adversity to communication skills in a working environment, which are something that generally can't be learnt in other university courses. They also introduced the concept of servanthood, which emphasize that as a leader, one shouldn't be high and mighty, rather he/she should serve and care about others as the first priority. Such concept is important in anywhere in our society, since only by adding values to the others can we bring success at a whole, but not just individually. I wish I can practice what I have gained in the course and serving others in the future.

(Yau Chung Wai Johnny / Medicine / Year 3)