One of the traditional Chinese festivals is the Lunar New Year. The dates of the Lunar New Year are generally from the first day to the third, fourth and fifth day of the first month. During Chinese New Year, we usually set off firecrackers, eat reunion dinner, make rice cakes, post couplets, and give out red packets. Usually during this period, we would still go everywhere to visit relatives and friends and pay New Year's greetings.

And the reason why people celebrate Chinese New Year is that in the ancient times, people believe that Nian is a very horrible, terrifying monster and so during the Chinese New Year, it would always come down to the villages and attack people and even eat their livestock. So, we found out that setting off firecrackers or fireworks or something red can scare the monster away. So, every year during Chinese New Year, everyone will set off firecrackers, set off fireworks, and post couplets. Over time, this custom has been passed down, and it has become one of the most important traditional festivals of the Chinese.
