

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Mr. T. L. Tsim, the former Director of The Chinese University of Hong Kong Press, persuaded me to write this book, and I am deeply grateful for his invaluable guidance and advice.

I should also like to thank two of my distinguished former teachers at the School of Oriental and African Studies, University of London. Professor D. C. Lau of The Chinese University of Hong Kong, who has given generously of his time and his encouragement, and who suggested the inclusion and title of the story of "The Dragon King It Was That Died"; and Dr. Katherine Whitaker, who has enhanced my own pleasure in these well-loved stories by sharing with me her vast and scholarly knowledge of their origins in Chinese literature.

Finally I wish to express my gratitude to Mr. Fung Wai-kit and the staff of The Chinese University of Hong Kong Press; working with them has been an enjoyable and rewarding experience.
