
The Future of Spatial Analysis in the Social Sciences

Luc Anselin

Department of Agricultural and Consumer Economics
University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign
Urbana, IL 61801-3608

Abstract

This paper presents a personal view on some emerging research directions at the interface of social science and spatial analysis. Particular emphasis is placed on methodological challenges presented by developments in social science theory, demands for data manipulation, and the need for education and dissemination.
