

MA in Linguistics

The MA Programme in Linguistics provides intensive training in linguistics for students who have not had a systematic training in language studies. We encourage a comparative perspective on the study of language structure, language acquisition and language use. Students are exposed to current theories in linguistics and their various applications to language acquisition, language typology, sign language and modality for communication, language teaching, as well as culture and society.

Results of the Research Assessment Exercise (RAE) 2020 announced in May 2021 by the University Grants Committee (UGC) show that our linguistics department is ranked the highest among all the linguistics and language studies units of the universities in Hong Kong. 55% of our overall academic research are rated as world-leading (four-star, the topmost level of the assessment), and 87% as world-leading and internationally excellent (four-star plus three-star); and both our research impact and research environment got a full score, 100% four-star (world-leading)!

Professional Recognitions:

The “General Linguistics Stream” of the MA Programme in Linguistics enjoys the status of:

MA in Chinese Linguistics & Language Acquisition

The MA Programme in Chinese Linguistics and Language Acquisition offers intensive training in contemporary analysis of Chinese language structure, the acquisition of Chinese as a first or second language, and the application of linguistic theory to the teaching of the Chinese language. It is intended for current or prospective Chinese language teachers and students of Chinese who are interested in a scientific understanding of the structure of Chinese and the cognitive processes underlying language learning and teaching.
