Dr. Bill Jeffery

Assistant Professor, University of Guam,
Research Associate, Hong Kong Maritime Museum

Maritime archaeology commenced with a fascination and collection of antiquities and not always with a motivation to preserve and study the archaeological record for the benefit of the general public. Sites such as Nanhai No.1 in China and the Hong Kong waters could potentially contain sites of great interest in China's maritime activities.

This talk will discuss these issues and activities in addition to placing the region's maritime archaeology into the world context, particularly in association with UNESCO and its Convention on the Protection of Underwater Cultural Heritage.
